Thermodynamic integration using a multiple expanded ensemble: a numerical implementation for the calculation of energy differences at constant volume. A numerical implementation for the calculation of energy differences at constant volume has been developed for thermodynamic integration within the multiple expanded ensemble (TIES) scheme. The implementation is based on the analytical solution for the multiple expanded ensemble (MEE) temperature profile, which is accurate to better than  $10^{-7}$  for sampling times of more than 250 ps. The partition function can be expanded to an arbitrary order, and the derivatives with respect to the simulation parameters can be calculated analytically. Two methods are discussed for the calculation of the MEE partition function: a single-histogram path integrals method and a self-consistent path integrals method. Both methods include the measurement of the energy at each MEE step. The accuracy of the calculated energy differences at constant volume is tested for 9 systems with large differences in energy at constant volume, including systems containing small numbers of point particles at extreme dilution conditions. The results from the multiple expanded ensemble are compared to experimental free energies. Error in the energy values is estimated as the difference between the free energy in the multiple expanded ensemble from the experimental free energy. These error estimates are on the order of  $10^{-6}$  to  $10^{-7}$  times the magnitudes of the free energies, which is expected for an estimator employing a relative error of  $10^{-4}$  or less. // // VROARScene.h // ViroKit //

Details Reviews of this property Fair average experience. All staff members are efficient and kind. They will assist you as much as possible. If you need cheap travel service, this is the place. If you want to enjoy hot spring, Bali Lazy Bungalows in front of the hotel is good choice. There are many restaurants in front of the hotel. My husband and I are traveling for medical surgery in a couple of days so we were staying in the hotel for a few days. We were given a room on the second floor overlooking the pool and garden which was perfect. It had a small balcony and the views from the balcony were fantastic, so we spent most of our time outside. The room was clean, the bed was comfortable, and the bathroom was clean and modern. The only slight inconvenience was that our room door did not lock properly so I had to constantly go and check that the door was secure before going to sleep. The staff were very friendly and were always happy to help. They gave me a key so that we could stay longer but it was difficult edd6d56e20
