The total magnesium (Mg) and phosphorus (P) content of the serum of patients suffering from hypertension have been investigated. The total Mg and P contents were lower in the serum of untreated hypertension patients than in the serum of healthy subjects; the Mg content was lower in the untreated hypertension patients than the P content. The levels of Mg and P in the serum of normotensive, untreated hypertension and treated hypertension patients showed no significant differences. The level of P in serum of normal subjects is 1.13 +/- 0.04 mg/100 ml. The P level in the serum of patients suffering from essential hypertension is significantly lower than that of normal subjects. The level of Mg in serum of patients suffering from essential hypertension is also lower than that of normal subjects. The reduction of Mg and P in the serum of patients suffering from essential hypertension is significantly more marked than that of treated hypertension patients. e79caf774b
