DOWNLOAD.Q: Consequences of adopting JavaScript MVC pattern? This is my first foray into JavaScript development, though I've been building software for a few years with C/C++ and Smalltalk. I've recently been introduced to the MVC framework. How do I know if I should adopt it for my projects? A: No, it's better to use native JS, for example on node.js or Chromium Embedded Framework (aka CEF). A: Sometimes I have doubts on this, but if you always will use and work with it, then for sure you should go for MVC. The structure makes code much more manageable and readable and if you start developing, you'll quickly see how great it can be. The MVC is not a silver bullet and that's why there is a lot of stuff about it. There are so many ways to use it. Personally, I like to see more the separation of User Interface (UI), Data Model (DTO) and business logic. I'd probably add Presentation layer and keeping that in mind, you can divide the application into many layers. If your users gonna be static and a lot of them, it could be useful to have a static page with a lot of JS and ajax. Instead of going forward with more and more code, you could rely on a Javascript framework to do all the dynamic things for you. JS frameworks include frameworks with MVC or you can use Google Closure or jQuery or what you prefer. There are also some projects like AngularJS that make you use the MVC but you don't need to do it, you can just use AngularJS. Another great thing that frameworks like AngularJS or Backbone.js can do is that we can develop different parts of an application independently without having to do any cross-app work. I'll add something about my personal experience
