Flyover Zone's virtual tour of Hadrian's Villa presents a reconstruction of the complex as Hadrian knew it, complete with its outdoor sculptures. The virtual tour is intended to be used as a reference for study and instruction. The general public will find it fun to explore, to view the internal rooms and to notice how the complex was used. The sophisticated architecture is accurately displayed by the use of high-definition graphics and a revolutionary new synthesis of virtual reality and 3D modeling. No other historical reconstruction offers the same degree of integration of visual reality, technology, and education. It is one of the most complete scholarly reconstructions of a pre-modern villa in the world. The unique structure of Hadrian's Villa is the result of the careful planning of architects and engineers. Hadrian spent many years landscaping the grounds and designing all of its internal rooms and external features. The reconstructed site contains 360 total rooms and more than 2000 artifacts. Each room is presented in detail, with the life-size figure of a person moving through the room in a realistic 3D display. As you explore the reconstructed site, you have the freedom to use your mouse to turn your virtual head, look up, down, around and through structures, notice sculptures, read information panels, and read about the life of Hadrian at the site, including descriptions of the daily routine of the emperor and his court. You can play Flyover Zone's Virtual Tour by itself, or as a part of an educational curriculum. In either case, the site has been verified and approved for use by educators and school administrators. Use Flyover Zone's virtual tour to learn about the culture and society of ancient Rome. Gain the tools to become a better conversationalist. ## History:

The game started as a personal project during my spare time in school and after my graduation. It is the first game that I made.

My first version was released as a demo, which came out of the exercise of knowing Python and creating an interactive illustration module on a tablet.

The Wormaid is a procedurally-generated puzzler where players explore an eccentric castle and try to figure out how to solve puzzles. There is no traditional boss rush, but the better you get, the more you'll see of the game's 42 endings. In a three-minute stroll to the top of a mountain, the player will traverse a number of rooms filled with some of the most interesting puzzles ever conceived. The Wormaid was created as a student game project in 2012 by Diroom Studios, the team behind their acclaimed public-domain "200-solve" puzzler, The 7th Guest. Shortly after its release, The 7th Guest received great attention on forums, podcasts, and a host of other outlets, and eventually led to a resurgence of games created by fans in their spare time. The Wormaid was also featured as a regular in the St. Louis Game Convention from 2013-2016. Diroom Studios is currently working on their next game, Arcanum: Of Steamworks and Magick Obscura, a tabletop roleplaying game for the age of steampunk. Key Features: •Filling Rooms •Filling without Making a Mess •Freeform Design •Inexplicable Obstacles The Wormaid is an indie puzzle game where you play as an exceedingly long worm-like creature seeking to unravel the mystery of your lost children. The puzzles follow the theme of space-filling (covering all tiles on a grid); however, the order and pattern of filling can reveal special symbols in the world that become a stepping path for the strange inhabitants of the game. ## What's new in Spark Of Light:

~ QKD I've been contemplating on getting a QKD setup... I'm just wondering about the technical requirements, I don't know if I'm just not giving it enough of a chance, or if it's just something I'm not familiar with. However, I'm considering getting the Samsung WF-TA720, and ebay still has excellent deals on them... The only think to consider, is whether the performance of this will be "worth it" in the end. This is mainly due to the fact that IMO, you can use this with any data connection, and you won't have to make that limit for the strength of your phone, in fact, this has the chance to be cheaper than say... the Rubika. Also, after seeing a few data transmissions done with the WF-TA720, you can see a clear difference in the speed and depth of each connection. I'm just worried that it might not be beneficial in the long run, as in my case this option is cheaper, but not always.. I could be wrong. Also in my other topic on this forum, I was considering getting the Rubika (RKM220I or RKM220II) or the Rubiya (RKM200I or RKM200II). As I mentioned in there, I would like to use it with things like google voice, and here in Quebec, my price will be around $150 for one that is unlocked and normal TELUS, or $200 if it's a modem... This includes that it should be compatible with TTY (T37 protocol on TTY requirements), and the only option that is available for these, in my knowledge, is for the RKM220I or the RKM220II (bunkered or not). However, the RKM200I or RKM200II are cheaper, and compatible with Micro2 (Wireless is my normal service provider) UNBAND service, which is cheaper than TTY. Before I decide whether to get the RKM220I or RKM220II, should I consider the advantages and disadvantages of both? Which one do you think is more reliable in these ways: If I have to send a message to someone in the middle of the night, what would be the advantage (or disadvantage) of using WIFI such as this compared to TTY... I don't know if this has been well documented before, but If
